Lesson Title: Group discussion and New Perspectives on Free writing

Today's lesson started with my sharing some of your answers from last week's feedback form and what stuck with you from the reading.

Then we moved on to the free write for this week. The question was: "What's on your mind?" This time we added a twist. After finishing, we all read our writing out loud at the same time. This was uncomfortable for you, of course, but it's a strategy you will read more about in this week's reading by Peter Elbow, especially in chapter 2 of this week's text. Even if it was painful reading your unpolished writing, it could have been worse! I didn't make you share your writing with anyone else.

Read Chapters 1-5 for next week's discussion. If you want, you can start with Chapters 2-5 and go back to chapter 1. We will start our discussion with Chapter 2.

Our main discussion this week focused on questions you asked each other after reading the Hayot chapters assigned for this week (chapters 1-5). In particular, fear, anxiety, expectations, when you are allowed to have an opinion and how to create a writing practice came up. We also talked about reading academic writing in other languages, which I would like to go into further next week (remind me!!)

Your Homework for next week, December 2, 2022.

- 1. Revise your essays based on feedback from the Peer Reviews. Submit by December 2, 2022 Email your essays to: karolinejeane.steckley@units.it
- 2. Read Chapters 1-5 from Writing with Power by Peter Elbow.

Finally, here is the feedback form for today's class.

Have a great week!

PS. Going back to our discussion of how Hayot begins writing sessions by playing video games first...

For you gamers out there, here is an article Hayot wrote about video games and the novel. Enjoy!
